Reviving the music of the Weimar Republic

Barry Humphries tells us why he loves music from 1920s and 30s Berlin, and what we can look forward to at his Weimar Cabaret.

'This should really be subtitled "the music Hitler hated",' says Barry Humphries of his show Weimar Cabaret – which sees him as we've never seen him before, taking us on revelatory tour of mainly Jewish composers from the 1920s and 30s whose music was denounced by the Nazis.

The upbeat blending of classical and popular music that was the sonic backdrop for many in the Weimar Republic is sadly now slipping from public consciousness.

But Humphries is on a mission to revive the sounds that first enchanted him as a teenager in his native Melbourne and remain a source of great passion for him.

As emcee of the show he introduces us to some of the greats from the time, including Kurt Weill, Friedrich Hollaender and Erwin Schulhoff. Renowned cabaret artist and singer Meow Meow performs, accompanied by Aurora Orchestra. 'I became interested in this music in my schooldays,' remembers Humphries. 'There was an influx of émigrés from Austria and Germany to Melbourne in the late 1930s, so we inherited a kind of cultural tradition that was not our own.'

'It's very good music, very bright and uplifting,' he says. 'But what also appeals to me is it's really about the triumph of art over tyranny.'

The art of creative networking

Creative Careers guest speaker Kym Andrews, a BBC-trained communications specialist, shares her tips for making the most out of networking opportunities to build a successful career in the creative industries.

1 Walk up confidently, smile, make eye contact, say, "Hello my name is [whatever your name is] and I'm [a dancer/producer/photographer/puppeteer/ whatever the hell you are]. Lovely to meet you."

2 Have a strategy: Before you head off to network, you need to be clear on your objective. Why are you at this event? What are you looking for? Who should you be speaking to?

3 Be authentic.

Creative Careers are talks and workshops run by Barbican Guildhall Creative Learning aimed at young creatives or those aspiring to work in the arts or creative industries. Find out more and read all of Kym's advice in Rachel Segal Hamilton's post on the Creative Careers blog.

Hello

Welcome to a summer of boundary-pushing arts. It's the season to get outside, so join us as we head to E17 for our spectacular Walthamstow Garden Party (see pages 5-6), or head for Smithfield for a free weekend to mark 150 years of the renowned market.

At the Centre, discover the soprano taking a new approach to classical singing (page 13); rediscover the music of the Weimar Republic through Barry Humphries' decades-long passion; see documentary filmmaking in a new light when a major Virtual Reality experience arrives (page 4); and find out what happens when Garage DJ Spoony helped remix some of the genre's greatest hits (page 10).

There's plenty of free activities and art to see, too, including an exciting new large-scale installation, a new auditory showcase and a subversive Trompe-l'œil (page 17-18). Read on and be inspired.

Writer, curator and artist David Company explores how Dorothea Lange's Migrant Mother became synonymous with the Dust Bowl era of the 1930s, and the mixed blessings of such an 'iconic' photo.

'Iconic' photographs have a kind of fame that is self-perpetuating. Like celebrities, the more they are seen, the more they are seen; and the more they circulate, the more they circulate – but the less they are understood. As their status grows, their meaning becomes vague, little more than the accumulation of clichés and received wisdom.

More often than not, photographs become iconic when they become default substitutes for the complexities of the history, people or circumstances they could never fully articulate but to which they remain connected, however tentatively. As with monuments to almost forgotten battles, they are symbolic placeholders, public markers for a missing comprehension. If any photograph deserves the mixed blessing of being described as 'iconic' it is Dorothea Lange's Migrant Mother (1936). It has become one of the most recognised and reproduced, with all the power and problems this entails.

In February 1936 Lange was travelling and shooting in central California on assignment from the US government's Resettlement Administration. After a month away, she was driving back to her home in Berkeley when, near the town of Nipomo, she noticed a sign to a pea-picker's camp and headed there. Lange saw a woman seated before a makeshift tent with children around her. She took out her large-format (4 × 5 inch) camera, mounted it on its tripod and made seven exposures.

Lange's picture was published by the San Francisco News on 11 March that year under the headline 'What Does the "New Deal" Mean to This Mother and Her Child?' There the photo was presented alone, setting the pattern for its countless subsequent presentations as an isolated symbol rather than as part of a larger piece of journalism. It was widely reproduced in the latter 1930s.

By accident or design, or something in between, Lange's image fits within a familiar pattern of mainstream depictions of suffering women and children. With its classical form and clarity of gesture, traditionalists might claim there is something timeless and eternal being communicated by Lange's photograph, as if it encapsulated core and incontrovertible truths about motherhood, childhood and human nature.

In 1978 the 'migrant mother' was tracked down by a reporter for a California newspaper. Her name was Florence Owens Thompson, and she told of her experience and of wishing Lange hadn't photographed her, of Lange promising not to publish the pictures, of not having been asked her name and of not making a penny from the success of the image.

Dorothea Lange had died in 1965. Since she had been a government employee when she made Migrant Mother, its copyright had been in the public domain from the start. Reproduction free of charge is one of the reasons for its promiscuous circulation.

In 1998 Sotheby's in New York sold a print of Migrant Mother bearing Lange's handwritten notes for $244,500. Its reproduction still costs nothing.

This is an excerpt of an essay by David Company. Read the full version in the exhibition catalogue, on sale in the Barbican Shop and online.

See documentaries as you never have before when Sheffield Doc/Fest brings highlights from its exciting VR programme to the Barbican.

Alternate Realities

Prepare to discover Virtual Reality (VR) in a way that will change your appreciation of the medium, when the UK's premiere documentary festival, Sheffield Doc/Fest, comes here to share highlights from its Alternate Realities programme.

What exactly will be shown is still under wraps, but Alternate Realities curator Dan Tucker says it's likely to include a significant interactive VR piece which uses the latest headset, a 360-degree video documentary and a third screen-based installation.

'The artworks we are bringing to the Barbican from our Alternate Realities exhibition really embrace the Barbican's season The Art Of Change,' he says. 'Exploring new perspectives on the known and the unknown, these pieces immerse audiences in urgent stories of the present day and transport them into otherworldly dimensions of the mind.'

'Going to an arts venue like the Barbican to see VR is the immediate future of this as an arts medium. The subject of the works have real purpose and deliver powerful commentary on our lives that get people thinking and talking with others.

'People usually think of VR as an individualistic experience, but we show how that's a misconception. The host will explain what the artist has created and their message before you put on the headset. They are there to help you through the experience, before finally enabling you to have a conversation about what you've just seen.'

As an interactive and immersive documentary-maker himself, Tucker is passionate about the power of VR and AR to tell stories. 'I believe these are cultural artworks, which is part of why the Barbican is so appropriate as the first stop on our UK tour.'

Supported by a week of documentaries in our cinemas.

The ultimate summer garden party

Your guide to Walthamstow Garden Party – two days of global and local music, theatre, dancing, food and community fun in E17.

International musicians and east London organisations come together for a weekend of arts as Walthamstow Garden Party returns to Lloyd Park for a fifth year.

The free festival sees a bursting line-up of music, theatre, dance, circus, film, spoken word, arts and crafts, food and drink.

Find out more about what's going on and how it happens with our guide.

What's on

Across the festival

Packed with performances and workshops, you can discover dance, circus and physical theatre at the News from Nowhere stage; or try a new skill thanks to local makers at the Useful and Beautiful area.

Fellowship Island brings together a passionate brigade of food and drink producers, urban growers, local artists and organisations exploring ways to cultivate a closer connection with nature and community in the city in a sustainable way.

Music Highlights

On the Barbican Music Stage you'll see artists from around the world, picked by our Contemporary Music programmers. It's like bringing the Barbican's stage to E17. Here are some of the highlights:

Fatoumata Diawara

Hailed as one of the most important voices in contemporary African music, Diawara blends Mali's rich traditions with modern genres to create her own sound which has garnered her fans including Damon Albarn and Gilles Peterson.

Dona Onete

Recording her debut album aged 73, Brazilian singer-songwriter Onete – now 78 – is rightly regarded as the 'grande dame of Amazonian song'. Influenced by the Carimbo dances of indigenous people, Samba and Bolero, her deeply personal lyrics have won over audiences worldwide.

Cero39

Having remixed some of Latin America's most respected artists, Colombia's Cero39 meld influences from Latin Pop culture, Indie Reggaeton, Hip Hop and Dembow to create a tropical sound that you can't help but dance to.

Adrian Sherwood and Creation Rebel

In a career spanning over 30 years, producer Adrian Sherwood has worked with artists as diverse as Lee Scratch Perry, Primal Scream, Depeche Mode and Sinéad O'Connor. He'll be joined by early collaborators Creation Rebel, the pioneering Reggae Dub group who forged their own path in the early Punk era.

47Soul

The Shamstep band originating from Jordan and Palestine fuse electronic Hip-Hop with traditional Dabke dance music and add a dash of Reggae for good measure.

But the Barbican Music Stage isn't the only place to find great tunes. If you fancy shaking your stuff to the best of local turntable talent, head for the Glittering Plains Dance Tent. And at the Earthy Paradise Tent, there's a showcase of local talent, including Urban Flames, Barbican Young Poets and Drum Works.

Creative Citizens

Among those busy behind the scenes of Walthamstow Garden Party is a group of eight people from the local arts and community sector: our Creative Citizens. We're providing mentoring to help them grow professionally, while they ensure that the festival grows the creative industry within the borough. This year they're programming and producing the News from Nowhere stage and Fellowship Island.

Bringing Garage classics home

One of the main forces in bringing Garage to a wider audience, DJ Spooky is putting the genre in new context with Garage Classical, which sees some of the biggest UKG records played by an orchestra.

How did Garage Classical originate?

To celebrate two decades of the genre, Liverpool International Music Festival wanted to have Garage tunes played by an orchestra. So they approached me to help with picking records and getting in touch with some of the people who made them. Composer and conductor Katie Chatburn did the arrangements. It went down really well, so Katie and I decided we had to do it in the birthplace of the genre – London.

Why do you think it's been so popular?

People have never seen this music played in this way. There's also a lot of people who remember Garage when it first happened; they still want to go out, but in a different way. People like reminiscing, but this will be the music you love played in a world-class venue.

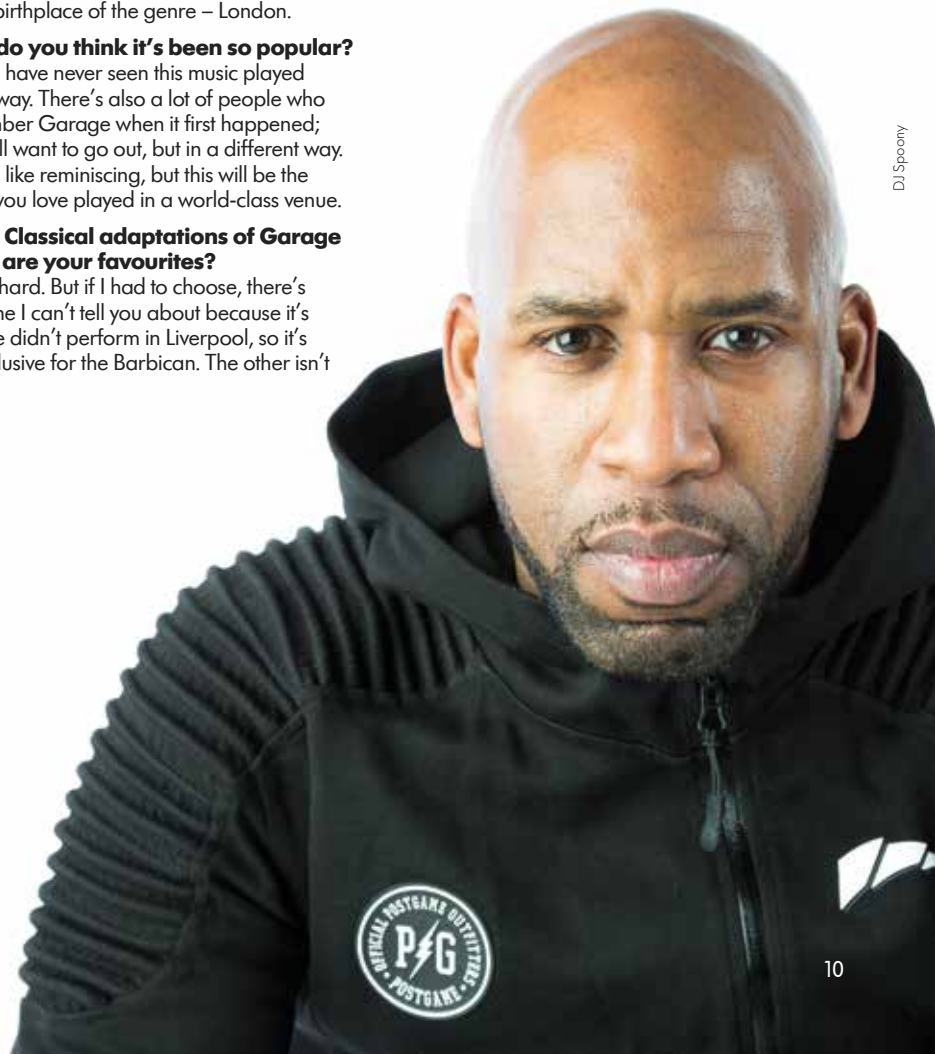

What Classical adaptations of Garage tunes are your favourites?

That's hard. But if I had to choose, there's two: one I can't tell you about because it's one we didn't perform in Liverpool, so it's an exclusive for the Barbican. The other isn't that well known, but it's absolutely beautiful – it's 'Think About Me' by Artful Dodger. It's performed as an instrumental and it's like it was meant to be played by an orchestra.

The rebel soprano

Dutch soprano Nora Fischer is blending classical and popular music styles to create a new style of music, and it's winning her fans worldwide.

Dutch soprano Nora Fischer wasn't necessarily the ideal student at Amsterdam Conservatory. 'If you study classical singing there's one vocal ideal sound – the biggest and most resonant, with lots of vibrato. I love the music, but I just don't agree with the way it's supposed to sound,' she says.

Fischer had other ideas about interpreting the manuscripts, and got creative.

The results have been winning her plaudits around the world. BBC Music Magazine described her as 'a revelation, both versatile and virtuosic', and her debut album HUSH has just been released by Deutsche Grammophon.

She'll be performing here as part of ECHO Rising Stars, a series which sees programmers at concert halls around Europe select the most exciting new musical talent. Her programme ranges from Bartók to Bernstein, plus a brand new piece by the genre-bending Dutch composer Morris Kliphuis.

That she enjoys blurring genre boundaries doesn't for one minute mean she shuns her classical roots. 'The core of classical music is so important,' she says. 'It's not a case of either classical or not – there's a space in between, an opportunity for someone to offer an alternative vision.'

And Fischer is winning over fans who wouldn't normally listen to classical music, including the crowds at Dutch pop festival, Lowlands.

'We love it when people who've never heard of the composer or the songs are clearly loving the music,' she says. 'So I'm always trying to reach out to people, to audiences that aren't the usual classical listener.'

Mew: Frengers

To celebrate the 15th anniversary of their acclaimed album, Danish trio Mew are joined by a string ensemble to play the record plus other highlights from their back catalogue. Frengers – a portmanteau of ‘friend’ and ‘strangers’ – blended dream-Pop melodies, elements of Grunge and dashes of Post-Hardcore experimentalism.

Alan Fielden with JAMS: Marathon

A man on the front line of a war is told to relay a message to the king: ‘we’ve lost the war, the enemy is coming.’ It sounds familiar, but Marathon is less about the Greek myth and more about the performers struggling to re-enact the play they’ve created of the same name. Created by this year’s recipients of the Oxford Samuel Beckett Theatre Trust Award, this is theatre for a generation engulfed by the fog of information in the digital age.

Modern Couples: Art, Intimacy and the Avant-garde

Including painting, sculpture, photography, design, literature and music, Modern Couples is the first exhibition to focus on relationships as a playground of experimentation in life and art. Featuring around 50 diverse couples, including Dora Maar and Pablo Picasso, Varvara Stepanova and Alexander Rodchenko, Lee Miller and Man Ray, and Virginia Woolf and Vita Sackville-West, the exhibition will challenge the prevailing notion that modern art was the result of solo-genius.

See a sunset whatever the time of day

The colours of a perpetual sunset will flood Level G when the latest commission is installed in the lightwell.

Borrowed Light will simulate a sunset.

Borrowed Light is a suspended mechanised structure that moves a 20m-long scroll of photographic film, thereby resembling an artificial infinite loop of sunset and sunrise. The installation was formally inspired by moving panoramas and the potential these offered to blur the boundaries between experience and physical spheres, natural and manmade spaces.

Borrowed Light is a site-specific installation commissioned by the Barbican Art Gallery to activate the unique architectural features of the Lightwell at the centre of the Barbican's public spaces.

Level G art through the years

Numina

The sculpture by Zarah Hussain combined designs found in the art and architecture of the Islamic world with contemporary digital arts.

Bocci: 44

This immersive light installation designed by Omer Arbel comprised of over 151 free-poured aluminium forms suspended from the ceiling by a matrix of thin cables.

Possibly Colliding

This immersive installation by the Berlin-based studio FELD explored the theme of collision with two revolving arms narrowly evading each other in a huge mobile of light and sound in constant motion.

What would an audio art gallery be like?

That's the question being explored on Level G by Eleanor McDowall (Director, Falling Tree Productions) and Nina Garthwaite (Founding Director, In The Dark), who are creating 'a soundhouse' in the space.

'This concept comes from the idea that audio doesn't get treated with the same reverence as film or visual arts,' explains McDowall. 'There's no audio cinema or exhibition space. So we wondered: what would a collective listening space look like?' McDowall and Garthwaite are programming a series of intimate experimental events on Level G around the idea of 'the listening body'. Audio from podcasts, radio and sound art will be curated around sensory experiences, leading listeners to consider how scent, light, touch, colour and movement impact their listening experience.

'It's not going to be perfect and it's not going to be a soundproof box; we want to play with the idea of how sensory provocations interplay with the audio experience,' explains McDowall.

The Trump l'oeil

Look up on Level G and your eyes might just deceive you. Lumen Prize finalist Rachel Ara has created a Trompe-l'œil with a difference. She tells us about the dark-humoured installation, located near the Hall.

An orange hairpiece dances in the wind in perpetuity around the Barbican Estate in Rachel Ara's American Beauty.

Hi Rachel, tell us about American Beauty

I really like awkward spaces. No-one really looks at that part of the Barbican building, so I wanted to create something that people could glimpse; something moving that would catch someone's eye.

To the viewer it will appear that they are looking through a floor to ceiling window out onto a walkway in the Barbican Estate. The scene will be hyper-realistic and will be configured to mimic the shadows and light at that time of day.

Inspired by the iconic plastic bag scene from the film American Beauty, an orange Trump-like hairpiece will be choreographed to be continuously blowing around helplessly on the walkway.

Trump's hair is quite a potent symbol; why did you pick it?

The intention is to use the symbol in a way that initially feels frivolous but draws out the very real threat that lies beneath it – while we are distracted by what seems stupid or comical (Trump), irrevocable changes are being made to civil society.

Everything has gone and the remains are blowing in the wind. The "artificial" hair, like plastic in the oceans (referencing the plastic bag in American Beauty) will outlive him, paralleling his legacies that will impact on future generations long after he has gone.

What do you hope people will take away?

I want people walking by to experience a simple and poignant moment. The hairpiece blowing around may catch their eye – then they may choose to stop and watch. In a sense it's their discovery.
